As a parent the education of your children is probably your highest priority.

The big question is.....

How many people have prepared properly for the ongoing costs of schools and Universities?

Traditionally, forward thinking parents have set aside a proportion of their income to pay for their children's education and have invested in funds, bonds, stocks and shares.

This is beneficial if the investments you have invested in are doing well. However gambling on this is fraught with difficulties and education is one thing you don't want to leave to chance.

By some measures, tuition has increased an average of 8% every year in the last 25 years.

What does this mean to your child?

A child born today could face a tuition bill four to five times more than a college student pays today.

According to The Telegraph, the average international undergraduate fee is £15,000 per year. When you consider the other factors such as rent, food and course materials, this figure will likely be nearer to £25k per annum.

If you wish to send your child to one of the top tier universities then expect to pay closer to £20k per year just in fees for Oxford or Cambridge, and up to £35k per annum at the top American Ivy League universities.

A report by Save & Prosper, the UK fund management group, claim the total cost of privately educating your child costs approximately £250,000 until graduation.

The report states: "The figure of £250,000 is based on average day-school costs. If you plan for your child to board at the school then the figure would be considerably higher. It is difficult to think as far ahead as education when you have a new-born baby, but investing wisely from day one makes sense."
